

Interface Library and Location

The interface consists of a DLL that exports a set of functions. The individual functions are described in Interface Functions. The interface DLL is called natni.dll and is contained in the Natural bin directory.

When executing a program that uses the Natural Native Interface, the Natural bin directory must be defined in the environment variable `PATH`, so that the calling program can locate the interface library and all dependent libraries.